> The east gets the rain the west never sees.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY

Rain, pines, and the Gulf

The wet east

Pine woods and the Gulf coast get the most rain. Summers are hot and humid. Hurricanes can reach the shore.

Texas Hill Country, near Burnet

> The Hill Country rolls. It does not lie flat.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY

Rivers and rolling land

Hills and plains

The Hill Country sits between rivers and open plains. Winters are usually mild. Storms and a sudden cold can still arrive.

> Out here, water is the real border.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY

Desert, canyons, little water

The dry west

Big Bend holds desert, canyons, and mountains. Days are very hot. Nights can be cold, and water is scarce.

A republic in 1836. A state in 1845.

HISTORY

How Texas became Texas

First nations

Caddo, Comanche, and Apache peoples lived here for centuries.

Spain and Mexico

Missions came first. Later, Texas was part of Mexico.

1836

Texas became an independent republic.

1845

It joined the United States as the 28th state.

1901

Oil at Spindletop changed the towns and the jobs.

> The Lone Star is a symbol, not the whole people.

CULTURAL IDENTITY

Many stories, one star

More than one people

Many nations knew this land before any flag. Spanish and Mexican families built towns and a Tejano culture that is still here. Later came Anglo settlers, African Americans, Czechs, and Germans. The Lone Star is one symbol, not the whole story.

> Oil under the ground. Wind above it.

ECONOMY

Oil, gas, and the wind

Energy

Texas produces oil and natural gas. It also leads the United States in wind power. That strength comes with a duty to use it carefully.

A ranch and a space center share one state.

ECONOMY

Cities, ports, and ranches

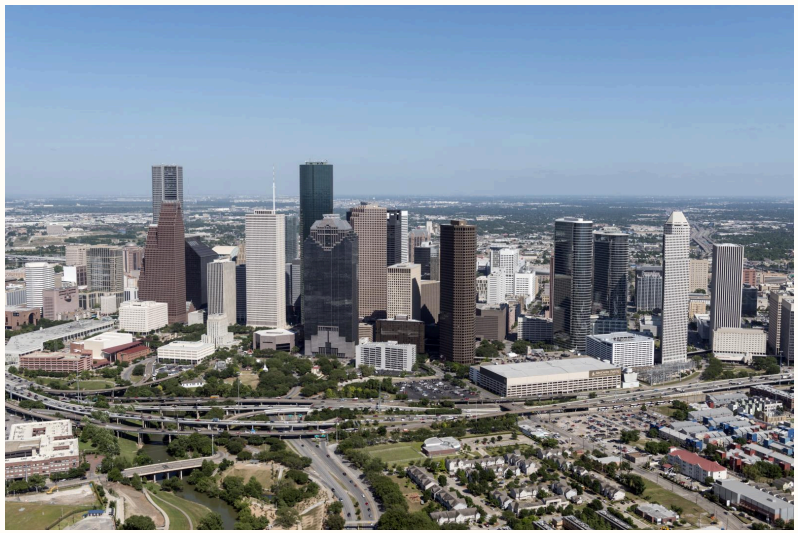

Cities of ideas

Austin builds technology. Houston runs a great port and the Johnson Space Center.

Land and cattle

Cotton and cattle still matter. Ranches keep an older picture of Texas alive.

Houston

Carol M. Highsmith · public domain · loc.gov

About two in five Texans are Hispanic or Latino.

DEMOGRAPHICS AND SOCIETY

A state that keeps growing

Cities and open country

Texas is home to more than 30 million people. Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, and Austin are huge, while much of the land is still ranches and small towns. About two in five residents are Hispanic or Latino. People move here for work, so schools and languages keep changing.

> In 2021, cold stopped the power.

A CURRENT CHALLENGE

The week the power stopped

What happened

In February 2021, extreme cold froze equipment. Millions of homes lost heat. Most of the grid is run by ERCOT, not by the national networks.

A fair next step

Some want Texas to stay independent. Others want links to neighboring states. One practical step is to prepare plants and fuel lines for freezing weather.
